Dear Allen:

I received a telephone call this morning from [redacted] of Boston who has had long experience as a research worker for various Government agencies and private persons, and who hopes that there might be some berth for her in CIA. She is going to be in Washington for a few days and will try to see you. This letter is in reply to a promise which I made her that I would write you a line about her qualifications.

At any rate, she now is anxious to return to Washington and find some Government post.

Perhaps CIA will have use for someone with her experience, and, if you think this might be so, you will perhaps want to refer her to someone in your office to interview.

Yours ever,
